The Finest Cleaning For Carpet Tile & Stone

How to Clean Microfiber Furniture

Because microfiber is durable and repels water, it is well suited to be used on furniture. However, furniture manufacturers and salesmen would like you to believe that they are un-stainable and indestructible. This is NOT true! It is possible to completely ruin your new microfiber sofa if you don't take proper care of it. It can be spot cleaned with a neutral spotter like our spot out, but the nature of the fine fibers demands periodic professional extraction cleaning.

Blood Stains: Soak the stain in hydrogen peroxide, wash (don't dry), and repeat if necessary. This tip works especially well for fresh stains on white carpet and clothes.

For the allergy prone, professional carpet and upholstery cleaning at least every 12 months is recommended to remove up to 95% of the soil, allergens, and contaminants.

Scientists may have figured out how to save coral reefs

For years, human pollution has been killing coral reefs around the world. But now, scientists think they may have found a way to save them.

Previously, researchers looked for new ways to curb our waste — for example, by fighting climate change or by cleaning up the ocean. But a new paper published in Nature argues that we should be focusing more on strengthening the reefs, to make them immune to pollution. “If we are to conserve or restore [coral reefs], we need to understand coral health — what drives tolerance and how can we promote it,” Caroline Palmer, visiting research fellow at the University of Plymouth and author of the paper, writes in a press release. “If you have a strong immune system, and the energy to support it, you are more likely to be healthy and to survive adverse conditions.”

Palmer has been studying the immune system of coral reefs for the past decade. She looked at coral's immune mechanisms and found that corals with higher immune systems were less likely to die or to be bleached.

“There is currently a lot of interest in creating more tolerant corals through genetic engineering and of restoring reefs by targeting more resilient corals,” she says. “I fully support these approaches, but believe understanding what drives coral health will be key to their success.”

Good Habits!

Remove your shoes at the door to minimize the amount of pesticides, particulates and bacteria you bring into your living space. Invest in a HEPA (High Efficiency Particulate Air) vacuum cleaner. The average carpet has nearly 70 grams of dust per square meter, and the HEPA filter helps ensure that it stays in the vacuum instead of reentering the air.

Professional Cleaning Guide:

- * Clean carpets every 6-24 months.
- * Clean mattresses annually.
- * Clean furniture every 12-24 months
- * Clean tile / stone every 24-48 months.

HEALTHIER INDOOR AIR!

Dust mites

You can't see these microscopic critters with the naked eye, but they can wreak havoc on your health. They may be one of the most common causes of allergies and asthma and can trigger the same miserable symptoms. Dust mites, too, need moisture and feed off the dead skin cells our bodies shed. Their favorite hiding place? Beds, pillows, mattresses, sheets, and any place you and your pets sit down to relax.

Mold

Does your bathroom, closet or basement have an old musty odor?

Blame mold spores. They make themselves at home in damp spots.

"Mold can grow within 24-48 hours where there's moisture and what they consider a food source," says Jeff May, co-author of My House Is Killing Me! and The Mold Survival Guide (both from The Johns Hopkins University Press).

It doesn't take much to make mold happy and multiply: It chomps down on dust, wood, paint, paper, cotton or oil, among other things. It's attracted to modern building materials like drywall. The common denominators are moisture and digestible material.

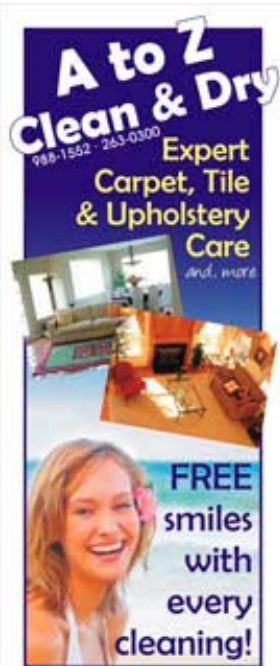

Complex heating and cooling systems can make mold matters worse, especially if you suffer from allergies or asthma.

Mold spores and the odorous mycotoxins can trigger asthma symptoms, such as coughing, wheezing and shortness of breath, the Mayo Clinic reports.

Allergic reactions include: sneezing; runny or stuffy nose; itchy, watery eyes; and inflamed sinuses.

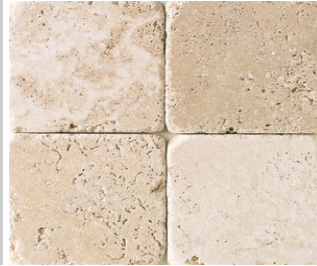

Common spots to find the fuzzy stuff – it often grows in a circular pattern and can be black, brown, white, yellow, pink or greenish-blue – are basement walls and carpets, closets and on wooden backs and bottoms of furniture stored in damp spaces. In some cases dehumidification units have helped to control the moisture that supports mites and mold.

As always, your best defense is to keep your home Clean, and Dry...from A to Z.

Einstein said for every amount of good fun, there is an equal and opposite amount of bad dirt!

A Clean Home is A healthy Home

Pet Owners:

If you are pet owners, like we are, then you know that accidents can and will happen. It's not the accidents that have the most consistent impact on you indoor environment though.

The build up of fine hair, oils and dander material eventually goes above and beyond what vacuum cleaners and household cleaning supplies can deal with.

So many pet owners should plan at least yearly, on both carpet and upholstery cleaning; at least in the areas frequented by their pet.
